

Collaborative Practice Talking Points

For use in media interviews

What is collaborative practice?

Collaborative Practice is a new option for divorcing couples to resolve disputes respectfully and equitably without going to court.

The goal of collaborative practice is to help divorcing and separating couples to focus on their most important goals, especially children, throughout the divorce process. The end result is a more efficient, targeted and productive way to resolve disputes

What distinguishes collaborative practice from other methods of divorce?

Collaborative Practice promotes respect and keeps spouses in control of the process, not judges.

It addresses each couple's unique concerns, as opposed to litigation which is driven by the general rule of law meant to apply to all.

Because clients agree not to go to court, the process is more open and less adversarial. The goal is to enhance communication throughout the process and lay the foundation for a healthier relationship after the divorce.

What is the biggest difference between collaborative practice and litigation?*

Control

In collaborative, you and your spouse agree not to go to court. This gives you and your spouse control of the process and outcome versus litigation, where a judge makes the final decision.

Collaboration

Instead of the win-lose court setting, the entire collaborative team ensures that both spouses work with each other, not against each other, towards mutually beneficial solutions for critical issues.

Communication

One barrier in litigation is a lack of effective communication between spouses. In the collaborative process, spouses learn a framework for effectively communicating their concerns and goals.

What is the biggest difference between collaborative practice and mediation?*Personalized counsel

Both you and your spouse are represented by your attorney throughout the entire process.

Team approach

the entire collaborative law team is there to help facilitate communication between the spouses, working towards the best possible solution for all and making sure all issues are addressed.

How does it work?

Make sure to answer using a case study of a divorce you handled, that includes the following talking points:

- Utilizes specialists who leverage their areas of expertise to address children's needs and the emotional and financial aspects of divorce
- Creates a safe environment for both parties without the threat of court
- Provides a structure for communication that considers each person's needs
- Shares information that allows good decisions to be made
- Focuses on a creative and respectful approach that helps clients reach a mutually agreeable settlement.

Who is Collaborative Practice for?

Be sure to answer with a case study that uses the following talking points:

- People going through a divorce who want a civilized, respectful resolution of the issues and are willing to focus on solutions rather than on blame or revenge
- People who want to maintain a productive working relationship with their (ex) spouses
- People who will be co-parenting and want to keep children's interests at the forefront, i.e. protecting children from the negative impact associated with bitter litigation
- People who want to control decision-making over child-rearing and/or financial arrangements rather than turning it over to a stranger (judge)
- People who place as much or more value on the relationship that will exist in the restructured family as on obtaining maximum resources
- People who value privacy.

What are the benefits of Collaborative Practice?

Better for children

- Gives children a voice in the process, alleviating the potential of future trauma that sometimes persists for generations

Private

- Keeps problems and assets private

Less stressful

- Improves communication between parties
- Keeps control of process with the spouses
- Promotes respect and healthier long-term communications

Focus on the future

Saves time

- The process is more efficient, productive and targeted because of the unique structure of the collaborative team

Learning Effective Communication Skills

- Communication skills acquired during collaborative process may have positive applications outside divorce.

(Source: Talking Points adapted from Liz Ferris of Ferris Consulting's How to Grow your Collaborative Practice workshop)